What it's About?

Building Economic Prosperity for Indigenous Women in the Industry and Trade Sector

Indigenous women are one of the fastest growing demographic groups in the country but they continue to face systemic barriers to prosperity, especially those working in highly-productive sectors such as Industry and Trade.

Only when these systemic barriers are addressed will our Indigenous women have greater opportunities for employment and advancement in the Industry and Trade sector. Indigenous women have found allies in Industry but allyship needs to be fostered at a systems-level. We can and should move forward together. Allies need to share their experience and learnings within and across sectors so that the conversation can shift from barriers to best practices and opportunities.

Who Should Attend?

This is event for anyone who stands to benefit from greater inclusion of Indigenous women in the Industry and Trade sector.

- Industry leaders and professionals supporting diversity and inclusion
- Indigenous women either working in or interested in the Industry and Trade sector
- Officials from government departments or non-profits that work to support the economic prosperity of Indigenous women.
